

Rife PEMF

Company History

Rife PEMF is the leading manufacturer and supplier of medical Bio-Active Electro Frequency devices in South Africa. By complying with South African and International standards, for our medical devices, the company is committed to manufacture and supply top quality, safe and affordable devices for medical use both domestically and internationally.

Our ongoing research, development, and established database ensure continuous service to our customers, keeping them informed of current research and development in the field of PEMF and with regards to our instruments.

Our resonators are based on a unique blend of original Rife technology in conjunction with state of the art PEMF technology. The history of Royal Raymond Rife is well documented and briefly outlined below. DVD's of the Rife story are also available from us.

Rife PEMF was founded in 1994 by Mr. W.G.E. Schwulst and has been on the leading edge of frequency therapy since the inception of the company. The first to apply and register the device, Mr. Schwulst saw the necessity of bringing Rife and PEMF technology to the people who could use it to greatest advantage.

There have been ongoing improvements over the past two decades as the company continues to strive to improve the technology and continues to research better ways of using Rife and PEMF technology to support and promote health and wellbeing. With each new device, customers are always given an opportunity to upgrade or trade in their devices to help them remain on the cutting edge of PEMF for health.

The History of Rife Technology

Scientist Royal Raymond Rife, who devoted his life to designing and building high-class microscopes and later, medical devices, invented the Rife Resonator. Rife developed technology that is still commonly used today in the field of optics, electronics, radiochemistry, biochemistry, and aviation. He received 14 major awards and was given an honorary doctorate by the University of Heidelberg for his work.

In the late 1920's and early 1930's Dr. Rife developed a high-powered microscope that he used in conjunction with a frequency generator. Using special UV light, Rife's microscope was capable of 60 000X magnification! This degree of magnification allowed him to observe live virus and bacterial organisms while he applied the MOR (Mortal Oscillatory Resonance) frequency from his generator via plasma tube radiation of the energy. He was able to destroy all manner of disease organisms (including cancer related organisms) by merely tuning the generator to the correct resonant frequency of the organisms and applying electromagnetic fields via his frequency generator.

Everything in the universe, living or dead, has its own resonant frequency. Just as the resonant frequency which shatters a crystal glass can only shatter that type of glass, so Rife's frequencies destroys only specific types of disease organisms with the same pattern of oscillation. Because every cell vibrates at a specified unique frequency, identifying that frequency and then increasing its amplitude causes structural stresses that distort and eventually destroy the organism. Using this technique, Rife could destroy a virus without disturbing or harming the surrounding tissue.

From 1934 to 1937, a number of doctors in America set up trials and used Rife's equipment and found it to be effective in treating many diseases. Because of the high costs of manufacture and the simultaneous discovery of penicillin and safer surgery methods, this technology became temporarily obsolete.

Like other medical researchers before him, Rife found that his unorthodox scientific theories met with opposition from the establishment. His work was stopped and further research was forced underground. However, some doctors quietly continued to treat patients using his equipment. After Rife's death in 1971, a few doctors and engineers reconstructed his frequency instruments and continued to keep his work alive.

With the advent of PEMF technology, researchers and scientists are now once again reviving the technology with many of these instruments now widely accepted and even passed for use for the treatment of pain, to improve circulation, and for the treatment of depression.
